

THE GOOD LITERARY AGENCY

Please note: This is not the submission form for you to submit your Adult Fiction manuscript to our team. Rather this is an example template of our form to help you prepare for your submission by allowing you to first read through the questions we ask, compiling the information and elements you will need beforehand. To submit your work to TGLA, please click the pink button labelled 'Submission Form' back on the Adult Fiction submission page. We look forward to reading your work!

Your Fiction Submission

As well as submitting your pitch, synopsis and chapters we want you to tell us where you think your book sits in the market and its genre (if it has one). The terms we use are very common in publishing but aren't always as clear cut to the average reader so please just try to make an objective decision about it using these guidelines. And for the record we passionately believe that where a book sits in the market doesn't dictate how good it is, but it does dictate which publisher it would be placed with, which retailers are likely to stock it and therefore how we handle it as an agency.

Genre and market position are different and so we want you to define both, though many literary and general books don't sit within a genre and so there's a box to tick for that. It's more common for commercial books to be part of a genre but literary and general often sit within it too.

Literary – books that very consciously aspire to take their place alongside other recognised works of literature, that one would like to imagine on prize shortlists, that experiment with form and style, that change how we think about the world.

General – the sorts of books that make up the heart of what reading groups love (and what Waterstones sells), they can be quite literary or fairly commercial, will often make you laugh and cry and can be very hard-hitting.

Commercial – unashamedly mass-market and popular, often with a clear genre and returnable ie part of a series probably focused on a central character or characters.

Where does your book sit in the market?

- Literary
- General
- Commercial

Does your book have a genre?

- No, it's general
- Crime / thriller
- Commercial Women's Fiction
- Historical
- Romance / Saga
- Science Fiction / Fantasy
